Take a bow!

The arts really matter to us in Ireland; they are a big part of people's lives, the country's single most popular pursuit. Our artists interpret our past, define who we are today, and imagine our future. We can all take pride in the enormous reputation our artists have earned around the world.

The arts play a vital role in our economy, and smart investment of taxpayers' money in the arts is repaid many times over. The dividends come in the form of a high value, creative economy driven by a flexible, educated, innovative work force, and in a cultural tourism industry worth €2.4 billion directly a year.

The Arts Council is the Irish Government agency for funding and developing the arts. Arts Council funding from the taxpayer, through the Department of Tourism, Culture and Sport, for 2010 is €69.15 million, that's less than €1 a week for every household.

So, at the end of your next inspirational encounter with the arts, don't forget the role you played and take a bow yourself!

Foreword Yeats Project

Welcome to our Yeats Project 2010. Under this project Blue Raincoat continues to produce our selection of dramatic works by W.B. Yeats on an annual basis.

We take this opportunity to update you on our programme so far this year and to mention upcoming events during 2010. The Yeats Project has been preceded this year by two successful tours. In early spring we undertook a nationwide tour of At-Swim-Two-Birds. This was followed in May by sell-out performances of The Third Policeman in Glasgow and Edinburgh. We return to Glasgow and Edinburgh with At-Swim-Two-Birds in 2011.

In October we revisit the works of Eugene Ionesco with our new production of Rhinoceros. Previous works we have staged by Ionesco are The Bald Soprano (2006) and The Chairs (2007).

The Blue Raincoat Theatre Resource Project this year sees the continuation of our Lecture Workshop programme commenced in 2007. In November, voice coach David Goldsworthy from the Roy Hart School in Melerargue France, returns to offer a further series of voice development classes for actors. 2010 is the second full year of operation for our Theatre Library. This year we have added visual display facilities for the in-house viewing of our collection of contemporary theatre studies and productions on DVD.

2010 is also the second year of the Mobile Theatre initiative of our Theatre Resource project. Through the support of the Arts Council of Ireland's Touring and Dissemination Grant we will tour At The Hawk's Well and The Cat and the Moon to eight venues around the northwest in November and December under this programme initiative.

Finally in 2010, again through our Theatre Resource Project, we commenced the workshop elements of our ScRIPT programme in March. ScRIPT (Scheme for Regional Interaction with Professional Theatre), sees us delivering an extensive range of theatre related workshops between March and November. Through this programme Blue Raincoat are pioneering a new developmental and mentoring model between professional arts organisations and local arts-related community concerns. The project is being supported by County Sligo Leader Partnership Company, under the aegis of Peace III, through the Community and Capability Training element of the current Regional Development Programme. In tandem with the workshop programme County Sligo Leader Partnership and Peace III are mentoring the establishment of a permanent cross border theatre network.

Our Yeats Project 2010 features At The Hawk's Well and The Cat and the Moon. We thank you for being with us for these performances. We hope you enjoy the productions at that we will see you at our other events in 2010.

At The Hawk's Well

An old man climbs to a mystical well in a high and barren place every day for fifty years, seeking to drink the magic waters of eternal life that one day will fill the well. He has wasted his life away waiting for that day that only “the holy shades that dance upon the desolate mountain” know when will occur. The well is guarded by a woman of the Sidhe, a she-hawk, to clean out the well and drive the cattle off. This day, on foot of a rumour told over too much wine a young Cuchulain has sailed from Ireland to find this enchanted well and drink its waters.

W.B. Yeats & the search for a passionate theatre

“We have to write or find plays that will make the theatre a place of intellectual excitement”

In their study Yeats and The Noh, Sekine and Murray point out that from as early as 1903 Yeats was proclaiming radical ideas in a search for a new type of Irish Theatre, opposed to the naturalistic style that predominated. “We have to write or find plays that will make the theatre a place of intellectual excitement” he proclaimed. “If we are to do this we must learn that beauty and truth are always justified of themselves, and that their creation is a greater service to our country than writing that compromises either in the seeming service of a cause”. Cathleen Ni Houlihan had been staged just one year before and Yeats is expressing tacit remorse that his own art in that instance had been propaganda.

In the first play of the Cuchulain cycle - On Baile's Strand (1904) - Yeats applies himself epically to the great characters and sagas of Irish mythology. If Cathleen Ni Houlihan was set against the historic backdrop of 1798, Cuchulain by contrast was a creature of mythology and therefore could be adapted to Yeats's overall cultural agenda. The Green Helmet says as much about Yeats's personal disdain, bitterness and disillusion with Irish theatre audiences as it does about a cultural agenda. Nonetheless Yeats is still using Cuchulain and the tribes of Irish myth to make his point, and his disillusion was matched only by the depth of searching he was still engaged in to find a keener artistic truth for Irish theatre.

By the time of At The Hawks Well (1917) and The Only Jealousy of Emer (1919), Yeats was in pursuit of “passion” and “the moment of intense life”. He was morphing and merging the ideas of Gordon Craig and Noh theatre to do so. A new foundation for his cultural agenda was based on the individual passionate artist expressing the often savage vulnerability of human character. In these plays Yeats' characters are less the creatures of mythic saga or nationalistic self sacrifice and are much more rooted in individual tragic human passion where Yeats could invest tangible personal experience. Indeed it could be said Yeats is now free entirely of myth and allegory, replacing them through Noh, with a ritual that had no basis in Irish tradition whatsoever.

By the time of his final play The Death of Cuchulain (1939) Noh has in turn been turned over. A garrulous old author sits spitting out the vitriol of life as the band of musicians he has carelessly assembled that morning for the opening ritual wait back stage. Yeats the passionate old artist has dressed himself in mythical rags and put himself directly on the stage.

W.B. Yeats & Gordon Craig

Edward Gordon Craig (1872 – 1966) was one of the most influential theatre designers and directors of the last century. Much of his influence on today's theatre is due to the fact that many of his ideas were deemed at the time they were being evolved as being too radical or impractical both in his native England and here in Ireland. This resulted in his move to the continent in order to find or create work in more open traditions and more importantly in his writing down and publishing 25 books and hundreds of articles on his theories. Where the work of many other directors and designers was lost over time due to the transient nature of theatre, Craig's thinking and designs have survived in abundance.

From 1908 on Craig had been advocating a style of acting that was called "symbolic gesture". Use of the mask was integral to Craig's ideas, and Yeats was deeply influenced by him. Craig designed a mask for the Fool in a new production of The Hour Glass in 1911. He also designed the mask for On Baile's Strand (The Blind Man). These two designs remained always in Yeats's thoughts as central to his concept of the mask. Also Yeats's decision to revise several of his early plays at this time was closely bound up with his interest on scene design and staging, and these revisions using Craig's concept of stage space anticipated Yeats's later adaptations of the Noh drama. Yeats like Craig, (or perhaps because of him) also rejoiced in the use of a bare simple stage. Gordon Craig's style of stage decoration, with its symbolic, abstract scenery, very much encouraged Yeats's break with nineteenth century illusionism*

What both Yeats and Craig had in common was that radical theatrical thinking served to increasingly alienate them from their immediate theatrical communities. Yeats's broader canvas, his often reactionary experimentation shifted him – much to his own delight it seems – off the stage of the Abbey into the drawing rooms of friends and acquaintances. Craig's focused life long discussion specifically with theatre alienated him to the continent for most of his working life. If Yeats pursued the ideal of personal passion and poetry within and without theatre, ultimately locating himself as the passionate artist within his own theatrical work, Craig spent a lifetime pursuing a purity of form that was and remains unique to theatre. Yeats is one of the seminal influences in 20th century literature and modern Irish culture, but Gordon Craig is a much more specifically felt and relevant force within theatre to this day.
